One-Move Capture Problems and Checkmates

This book is dedicated to Kids and Novice chess players.

Intro

This is a puzzle book that shows simple one-move captures for kids and beginners. Usually a beginner can see the capture if you show nothing else on the board but the piece to be captured and the piece that can capture it. A beginner might even say, “I already know how to capture pieces.” But if you watch kids and beginners in real games they are missing undefended pieces all the time. These puzzles can help beginners to see these undefended pieces in real games.

This book of tactics is simple for beginners. Most kids and beginners consistently miss undefended pieces. These are sometimes referred to as “hanging pieces.” If a beginner just learns to capture undefended pieces his or her chess ability will increase.

The ability to see and capture hanging pieces is something that the average chess player takes for granted. That may be why there aren’t a lot of books with these kinds of puzzles. These kinds of puzzles shouldn’t even be called tactics puzzles, since tactics mean skewers, forks, discoveries etc, and involve more than one move. However, being able to capture loose or undefended pieces is really far more important to a beginner than complex tactics. Without that ability even simple tactics wouldn’t even make sense.

As a chess coach, it is frustrating to stand back and watch kids miss opportunity after opportunity to capture a piece. I also see kids leave their pieces undefended. It is as if the kids are just moving their pieces around the board with no goals or purpose. In games like this, the kid who can notice and capture undefended pieces will be king of the hill.

Buy this book for your young chess beginner, and have him or her solve one or two puzzles per day. That might be enough to get him excited about the game of kings, as it is fun for kids to solve these kinds of puzzles and spot the hanging piece and how to capture it.

While there will be explanations provided for some of the answers, this book assumes that the reader knows the basic rules of chess and how to read chess notation. If you need help with that, go to http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Chess_notation

21.Qg3 The queen moves to g3. It moves away to avoid being captured by the knight on h3. It is important also to avoid being captured. Sometimes there is no piece for you to capture, you just need to notice that one of your pieces is going to be captured. Also, if the queen moves not just anywhere, but to g3, it makes it so the knight has no where to go, and so next move you will be able to win it.

(126) Black to move

18...Ba6 The bishop moves to a6. The bishop is being threatened by the knight on c1. Although it is true that there are two pieces aiming at the pawn on b7, and only one guarding it, it might not be wise for white to capture that pawn. If he captures with the bishop, the bishop is then pinned by the rook, and if it moves, white loses his queen. Of course he would not want to take with his queen, since the queen is worth far more than a pawn. By moving the bishop to a6, black keeps a safe retreat square for his knight on d2. A6 is the only safe square for the bishop that is on the diagonal that includes c4. This is thinking far ahead, but it's a good idea to try to see ahead in chess.

(191) White to move

12.Nxd4 The Knight takes the knight on d4. The queen on c2 was “en prise” which means at risk of being captured. You could also have moved the queen to d1 to guard the f3 square so that black doesn’t rip the kingside apart, but it undevelops a piece and is too passive. Undeveloping pieces means moving them back to their original squares. Sometimes you have to do this, but in the opening the goal is to develop your pieces, so it’s usually not a good idea.

Garykuk vs herrero

(236) White to move

13.Qf7+ The queen moves to f7 with check. Just like in the 4 move checkmate, the bishop guards the square on f7. After the king moves to d8, the bishop on c2 can come to g5 with check. The bishop blocks, and then the queen can take on d7 with checkmate.

Many other people sent me games as well, and I am very thankful!

Entering games by hand from score sheets into a PGN format can be a painful job, and I am fortunate that there are a lot of people who spent hours doing this.

Thank you to readers who helped me edit, and catch errors, and provided good ideas and feedback, including

Joey Guitian

Peter Horecky

Joel Johnson

Geoff Chandler

Stephen Dann

I am also grateful to the following websites that helped to provide me with games:
