Introduction

Dear readers! You read the book containing 857 tactical positions, taken from the rich practice of authors. The positions have been classified into separate chapters; except the last chapter, each chapter includes one tactical motif or more than one similar tactical motif, purely performed in the position. Unlike other chapters, the final chapter contains examples where the tactical motifs from previous chapters are combined. The reason that the book has been written is that a few books have been covering tactical motifs. I can mention some of them: “Combinational Motifs” by Maxim Blokh, 4th and 5th editions of “Encyclopedia of Chess Combinations” and “Chess Middlegames” by Laszlo Polgar. Additionally, most books provide tactical ideas in a diagram, while in practice, an idea might be found in the second, third move, or even later. In addition to these, some diagrams provide a question, which has written below diagram.

The guide about the chapters:

1. a Deflection and overloading – A piece defending either some square or some piece should be forced to move to another square, living a piece, square, or rank without any defense;
2. a Decoy – A piece should be forced to move some poisoned square, where it might be effectively attacked;
3. a Clearance – The positions where square, file, or rank should be cleared;
4. a Discovered attack – The positions where an opponent’s other two pieces are attacked by two different pieces. It could be possible by movement of some piece that clears the way of another piece with the same color and attacks an opponent’s other piece;
5. Pinning, unpinning, a skewer, and an X-Ray – The positions where one piece attacks two or more pieces in a line. In unpinning, one piece should be freed from a pin. In an X-Ray, a piece helps to attack indirectly;
6. a Double Attack – The positions where one piece creates two or more threats in different lines;
7. an Annihilation of defense – The positions where defending piece should be destroyed;
8. an Interference – The positions where one piece closes the way of an opponent’s piece;

9. an Obstruction and the trapping of pieces – The positions with trapping opponent's piece, blocking the pawn and other similar ideas;
10. an Intermediate move – The positions where an interposing move should be played before an expected move;
11. Mixed tactical motifs – As it is written above, the positions with two or more tactical motifs.

Positions from the variations of games and where one side missed an idea are marked with * before surnames of players. All answers are provided in algebraic notation with icons of pieces and standard chess annotation symbols. In addition to this, variations have been written in different emphasizes. In some positions, you can find more than one possible promotion of an idea; they are also included in the answers. Additionally, where it is possible, the FIDE Elo of opponents has been mentioned. Unfortunately, there are some players without names and one player without a surname, which we had not recorded in the score-sheet before; now, we are not able to restore their names.

The level of positions is approximately between 1200 and 2400 FIDE Elo. Nevertheless, strong players also might find useful positions for training.

If you have liked the book, please don't hesitate to put the review and recommend the book to the people you know.

With best wishes,

Bajarani Ulvi and Bajarani Ilgar, July 2019
